Translator's note: The letter of apology is a thing Japanese workers have to do when they screw up. It's only done in very serious instances, such as when you punch somebody. Also, the Platinum Media sign is outside a restaurant. It shows that there is a large gathering for that customer. It makes it easy for people to find where the party is, and for people to avoid a big party if they just happen by the restaurant.

Translator's note: Pouring your own drink is a major faux pas at a party in Japan. You need to let others pour for you. Basically, Shigeru is going totally against the party atmosphere.
