Wh-

Why should I go home with you... We're not kids anymore, you hear?

THAT'S RIGHT

I just wanted to go home together with you, so I waited here...

So-Sorry, Ryuu-chan.

What, it was just you, Honoka? You almost gave me a heart attack...

THE TWO OF US ARE WHAT YOU COULD CALL "CHILDHOOD FRIENDS"

THAT MIGHT BE THE REASON FOR WHY HONOKA KEEPS BOTHERING ME...

WE'RE HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS ALREADY, FOR GOD'S SAKE...

And I have my basketball practice, so knowing that I'm making you wait would just bother me...

But I... Really want to go home together with you, Ryuu-chan.

うん

They're calling you "the mop phantom" or something; they're seriously creeped out by you. You really stand out, you know...

You must know what people in our class have been saying about you.

Are you not going to cut your hair?

Y-Yeah, sure... Anyways...

...I don't care about them.

Is that so...

* TLnote: the term used here is "gankake" (願掛け), which is a type of a Japanese prayer for a wish to be granted. Basically, you refrain from doing something (e.g. eating your favorite sweets) until you feel like your wish has come true (or you have succeeded in something you prayed for) to show your dedication to your wish. In this case, Honoka refrains from cutting her hair as her "prayer".

That's a secret! I'm not telling you!

Prayer? For what?

It's a prayer...*

I'm really damn curious, though.

Let's just go home...

What's with the strand of hair..?

You didn't have to do this, I would've waited any-ways.

Hold it well, okay?

Don't peek, you hear?

WHY IN THE WORLD ARE WE DOING THIS..?!

You liar. You said the same the last time, but you just ran away.
