NOPE! IN FACT, THEY WERE ALL CRYING!

...SO LIKE, THAT'S WHAT HAPPEN-ED.

WORDS SIMPLY CANNOT EXPRESS THE ALLURE OF A MAN'S CUM!

THERE'S THAT FEELING OF SATISFACTION THE MOMENT THAT STICKY YET SILKY SMOOTH WETNESS SPREADS THROUGHOUT MY MOUTH...

WHAT'S MORE, THE COLOR AND FLAVOR IS DIFFERENT EVERY TIME! EACH AND EVERY ONE IS DIFFERENT, IT'S INCREDIBLE!

IF ONLY I COULD SPEND ALL MY WAKING HOURS SOAKED IN A MAN'S CUM, I'D BE HAPPY!

As a doctor, I should clarify a couple things. Never is a doctor-patient relationship justified. In the medical ethos, any relationship born out of the doctor-patient encounter is primarily duty-bound, such that anything outside of it may be considered of conflicting interest. In some cases, a doctor may be charged of seduction if the complainant was a previously chaste individual of sound character. Since this isn't really the case for our heroine, she can actually charge the doctor for rape if she wanted to. Regardless, even if she didn't press charges, the doctor is still duty-bound to rescind all personal relations with a patient UNTIL PROVEN that the doctor-patient relationship has been terminated. Termination of a doctor-patient relationship happens when a doctor rescinds care of the patient to another doctor and the patient has been presumably "cured" or is within "reasonable levels of improvement from baseline" AND if the patient recognizes and acknowledges a doctor's decision to terminate care as his/her primary physician. This means that no doctor can actually terminate a doctor-patient relationship on their own accord - it needs to be a communal agreement between both parties. Only AFTER this recognition of termination of doctor-patient relationship may the doctor, if he wishes, proceed to form a relationship with the former-patient. Obviously, this would require a lot of legal documentation from both parties if, indeed, they want to form a relationship with one another. In some cases, mutual binding following termination of contract can be grounds for qualified seduction, so it's still the doctor who gets the axe in the end. So in short, the doctor should just stay away from her. Even if he has feelings for her, he has to realize that his position as a physician bars him from taking advantage of any patient in any situation, even if it is not his intention to.

TL;DR - if you wanted to become a doctor to pick up chicks, think again. Oh, and she kinda looks like Sonico. Fawkin hawt.

Lord almighty, that's a big note, Ed. Anyways, my god this girl is lewd. I wouldn't mind losing my job if it meant getting sucked off 24/7 by her.
