TIME PASSES SWIFTLY

I'M A COWARD,
I'M VAIN
AND I'M SCATTER-BRAINED

AT THIS POINT...

TO CAUSE THAT MUCH PAIN...

I'M A LIAR

AND I HATE MYSELF
FOR IT.

...

WHAT COULD I POSSIBLY SAY AT THIS POINT?

I AM

THE

Afterword

Nice to meet you or hello, I am Itto.
I would like to thank you for purchasing 'Hamu and the Boy Who Cried Wolf,' on this occasion.

This story was written while remembering back to my school days.
Back before you were able to 'come out' to anyone, how did you guys feel?
I'm sure there were those that tried their best to steer clear of friends talking about leading ladies or erotic stories but I also imagine there were quite a few like Yuudai and I that elaborately constructed a lie.

I was very much like Yuudai during Middle School. I faked having crushes on female leads, and told erotic stories of my own. Now that I think about it, that was pretty terrible of me.
And I told so many lies that when Friend-A came out to me, and when Friend-B had something of a love confession, I was still unable to say, 'Me too,' and despite being good friends, things became awkward and we grew apart. It seems if you run away from the chance to speak up, the harder and harder it becomes to go back and say something. I met Friend-A again at a gay bar, but 'til this day I regret what happened with Friend-B. If I had been able to say it,
I would have been able to do many things to a middle school boy.. (wrong, I know).

When I entered high school, I came out to a certain fujoshi (a female BL/yaoi enthusiast).
After that, I told a ton of my friends. I guess not having to hide things really is easier, is what I remember from the time I didn't put anyone off, and am even now very grateful for those who were and stayed my friends. Having heard other coming out stories,
I think mine is definitely one of the lucky ones, though.

So that's it for the trip down memory lane. How did you feel about this book?
I'd love it if you even enjoyed it a little.
Opinions, feelings and such are gladly appreciated.
Thank you for reading until the very end.
See you later.

*NOTE: THE NICKNAME HAMU COMES FROM THE FIRST KANJI OF HIS NAME (SU) BEING COMPOSED OF THE KATAKANA "i" ha" ON TOP OF THE KATAKANA "A mu". THIS IS MEANT TO BE A COMICAL READING.
