TRANSLATION NOTES

TRANSLATOR NOTES | PAGE 6

The Bon festival (also known as the Obon) is a 3-day festival meant to honor the spirits of one's deceased ancestors. It is customary for people living in the city to go home to their native lands (usually in the countryside) in order to pay their respects. The specific date can vary depending on the region, but in the case of this story, it's held around summer time.

Isaki's mother used a pun here. She used the word 逃げを打つ when she tells Isaki it's okay for her to run away, but this literally means "to run away from one's responsibility". This has two meanings: 1) she can run away from the chores she needs to do for the festival, and 2) what Isaki is really running away from is her feelings, and not her duties. The reverse psychology in the latter meaning pushes Isaki to try and confess to Takumi.
