DON'T WORRY.
WE'RE NOT IN A RELATI-ONSHIP.
AS PROMISED, IT'S A GREAT JOB.

DID YOU REALLY THINK I'D WOULD FIND YOU AN HONEST JOB?
...LET ME GO.
I'M GOING HOME.
YOU'RE ACTING SO STRONG, BUT YOUR LEGS ARE SHAKING.
IT WASN'T MUCH,
BUT I STILL HAD FAITH IN YOU.
NOT ANY-MORE.

DON'T WORRY SO MUCH. IT'S NOT A BIG DEAL.
WE DO WHAT WE ALWAYS DO, JUST IN FRONT OF A CAMERA.
THERE'S SURE TO BE SOMEONE WHO WILL ENJOY WATCHING THAT.
ALL RIGHT. LET'S START.
PLEASE EXCUSE ME.

AS I THOUGHT.
EVEN IN THIS SITUATION YOU'RE QUITE SENSITIVE.
...GH!
SHUDDER
SLICK
SOMEONE AS DELICATE AS YOU IS NOT CUT OUT TO PROTECT YOUR CUTE LITTLE COUSIN.
YOU'LL HAVE TO HANDLE MORE THAN THIS, MATSUNAGA.
SINCE HE'S STILL A CHILD HE'S YET TO NOTICE HIS OWN INCLINATIONS.
YOUR COUSIN IS A TRUE SADIST.

To my dear readers

If you remember, I wrote about the grief of a true sadist in my first book and it was only a story about Sarasa and Kazunari. I'm terribly sorry. When Haruki appeared in the second book, I could finally grasp where this story was going.
I noticed in volume 2 that the two of them weren't supposed to be just two, but I didn't know if I could work out said characters to their full potential in three volumes.
That sucks.
It's plenty stupid if the author notices such things only in the second volume.

I think everyone has a right to strive for happiness.
There are times when "being your true self" is proclaimed as an important virtue, however, I think it's an essential requirement to acquire the strength to control the dangerous side of your own personality in order to achieve happiness.
I may say that but I'm the same as Sarasa: I'm the type to rely on others to cope with my dangerous side.
Ah, but don't worry, I'm not a sadist.

So that you, who read my books, don't influence the values of others, just think of catching your own happiness.
But I pray that you will meet this indispensable person to become happy, maybe with a little push from this work.
Thank you very much.

Aaah, I wrote such lofty things, all for nothing...
